We often hear from teachers that the standard textbooks they use are dull and dumbed down. In this age of rapidly expanding knowledge, we wondered why this should be the case. So we asked a publishing-industry insider, Tamim Ansary, to give us an exposé of the “sausage factory” that produces the books that frustrate teachers and stupefy students.

The George Lucas Educational Foundation (GLEF) is a nonprofit operating foundation. Established in 1991 by filmmaker George Lucas, the foundation produces and distributes materials that share hundreds of powerful examples of learning and teaching from our nation’s public schools. We hope this information will stimulate active involvement and guide choices in redesigning schools. www.glef.org
